UDC Views 'Surrender Scene'

Members of the 3rd District, Va. Div. United Daughters of the Confederacy toured the National Parkhere Sat., April 10, but not before they had an opportunity to see "Lee and "Grant" in a miniature scene of the signing of terms of surrender in the "McLean Parlor", Mrs. Tilden Lee (above) in a costume and bonnet she made especially for the 3rd District meeting at the Presbyterian Church, explained to UDC members and visitors that she researched details for both Lee's and Grant's costumes. Each general, as you will note, has an aide and the entire scene is set on a red floor covering. Each detail of the Guillaume painting at the Park was studied and duplicated even to a tiny pen and holder to simulate the actual signing of terms. Both the painting in the visitors' center and the McLean House parlor were visited by 3rd District members in the afternoon. Mrs. Lee is a doll maker and accomplished seamstress. She dresses both period and modern dolls.

SNAKES ALIVE !

"Snakes Alive" – more than an expression on Monday afternoon as William Mitchell brought to the TIMES-VIRGINIAN office a young black snake. "He won't bite," said Mitchell, but not many of the staff or visitors were willing to take a chance on that. Black snakes are a farmer's friend, explained Mitchell who rescued the snake from a highway and planned to let him loose in a safer, greener area (not Court St. or Virginia Ave., however, for benefit of those who suffer "serpentes Phobus" –a just made-up word-combination for those afraid of snakes.)

Fifth Graders Visit Times-Virginian

Fifth graders evidently enjoyed collecting souvenirs, as evidenced by this photo of a recent visit to the Times-Virginian by Mrs. Susie Martin's class with aide Mrs. Barbara Ratcliff. For all the young visitors there were writing pads, brochures about Appomattox and some extra paper from the print shop for projects. A look - see at community businesses is part of the on-going educational program at Appomattox Intermediate School (and other county schools) and the staff is pleased to show students the "hows" and "whys" of putting a newspaper together.
